Camdenton student one of five afterschool ambassadors

As a Youth Afterschool Ambassador, Irvine will be mentored by Sherry Comer, the Director of Afterschool Services of Camdenton R-III Schools and an emeritus of the Afterschool Alliance's long-running Afterschool Ambassador program, geared toward afterschool providers. The new Youth Afterschool Ambassador program builds on the success of that program.

A Camden student will soon be spreading the word at the national level about the importance of afterschool programs.

Maya Irvine, a 9th grader at Camden High School, has been selected to serve in the inaugural class of Youth Afterschool Ambassadors appointed by the Afterschool Alliance.

Irvine is a member of the Camden FIRST LASER Robotics team and is one of five students from across the nation to be selected for the honor of being an afterschool ambassador.

As a Youth Afterschool Ambassador, Irvine will be mentored by Sherry Comer, the Director of Afterschool Services of Camden R-III Schools and an emeritus of the Afterschool Alliance's long-running Afterschool Ambassador program, geared toward afterschool providers. The new Youth Afterschool Ambassador program builds on the success of that program.

The five Youth Ambassadors will each design and carry out a project showcasing the value of afterschool programs – such as creating a video or photo book featuring stories from youth or parents, or some other project of the Youth Ambassador's design. In addition, they will write a blog post for Afterschool Snack, the Afterschool Alliance blog, about the importance of afterschool; and travel to Washington, D.C., next April to participate in the annual Afterschool for All Challenge, where they will meet with members of Congress and their staff. "We're thrilled to launch this exciting new initiative, and eager to unleash the energy and creativity of Maya and her fellow Youth Afterschool Ambassadors," said Jodi Grant, Afterschool Alliance Executive Director. "Afterschool programs keep children safe, inspire them to learn, and give working parents peace of mind that their children are safe, supervised and learning after the school day ends. But too many children don't have a program available to them, so we need to spread the word. We know that Maya will do a terrific job helping get out the good news about afterschool programs."

"I'm really looking forward to serving as a Youth Afterschool Ambassador," said Irvine. "My afterschool program has made a really big difference in my life, and I can't wait to share my story, because I know it's the story of so many afterschool students here and across the nation."

"Maya will make a terrific Youth Afterschool Ambassador," said Comer. "I know from my work with the Afterschool Alliance and the Ambassador program, that there's a huge need for thoughtful, energetic spokespeople for afterschool. I can't think of a better way to demonstrate the value of afterschool than by empowering youth like Maya to send a message to the community about what afterschool means to them and to their families."

The launch of the Youth Afterschool Ambassador program is in conjunction with the kickoff of the 18th annual Lights On Afterschool, the nationwide celebration of afterschool programs organized by the Afterschool Alliance to spotlight the vital role afterschool plays in the lives of children, families and communities. More than 8,000 events around the nation and at military bases worldwide are expected on or around October 26, with more than 1 million participants. The five Youth Afterschool Ambassadors in this inaugural class come from four states. Two are from Washington State, and one each comes from Missouri, Wisconsin and Oklahoma.

The America After 3PM household survey of more than 30,000 families, commissioned by the Afterschool Alliance, found that participation in afterschool programs has increased to 10.2 million students nationwide, up from 6.5 million in 2004. But the unmet demand for afterschool programs has increased as well. Today, for every child in an afterschool program, there are two more whose parents say they would participate, if a program were available. Unmet demand is especially high in rural communities and communities of concentrated poverty. One in five students in the United States today is unsupervised after the school day ends.

A large and growing body of evidence demonstrates improvements in attendance, behavior, academic achievement and more among children in afterschool programs. Researchers have also found that afterschool programs encourage increased parental involvement – an important building block for student success.

The Afterschool Alliance is a nonprofit public awareness and advocacy organization working to ensure that all children and youth have access to quality afterschool programs. More information is available at www.afterschoolalliance.org.

Camdenton R-III Afterschool Services provides a wide array of services including FIRST robotics, PASS, English Language Learners programs, Enrichment classes, Open libraries and Lakerpack. All programs are linked to the Missouri Learning standards and district curriculum and are designed to provide extended learning opportunities for enrollees in grades K-12.
